Some Good Short Stories.

According to a story told by Will Payne, the novelist, in the Saturday Evening Post, John Fox usually spends his summers in Maine with his friend, Thomas Nelson Page. Once, while on a visit to Page, he ran into a Kentuckian whom he had not seen for a long time. Suddenly it began to storm. Large hail stones were rattling down. The Kentuckian grew sad. As the storm and hail increased in fury he became sadder. Finally he broke into uncontrollable sobs and cried like a child.

"What is the matter?" asked Fox, in utter bewilderment.

"Matter?" replied his friend. "Look at that waste of cracked ice in a Prohibition State!"

William M. Everts, Secretary of State during President Hayes' Administration, was celebrated not only as a statesman and a lawyer, but also as a great wit. On one occasion he was at a large stag dinner given by Edward Potter in New York. The five Potter brothers were among the numerous dinner guests.

Toward the end of the dinner Mr. Everts was called on for a speech, to which he responded:

"As I look around the table I am reminded of a story of a young Presbyterian divine, recently licensed to preach, who was holding his first service.

"In leading the first prayer the nervous young clergyman began:

"We thank thee, oh, Lord!" He stopped, cleared his throat, and then went on:

"We thank thee oh Lord!" "Again he paused, and then in desperation said:

"We thank thee, oh Lord, that Thou art the Clay and we are the Potters."

The guests were convulsed, and his speech was an instantaneous hit, although none but Mr. Everts would have dared to do it.

ify the trifling, mischievous imp with the bow and arrow. Unquestionably he is the ablest lawyer in the Senate, now that Senator Spooner has retired to private life, and it is toward him his colleagues look when they are making a legal argument, says the Chicago Tribune.

Knox does things quietly and easily, but none the less effectively. He never seems to be frustrated. Above all, it is recognized that he is absolutely square and just.

Some years ago ex-President Harrison called upon him in his Pittsburgh office.

"I have been requested to ask you to serve as my associate in some Cincinnati street railway cases," said Gen. Harrison, "and I hope you will accept."

Knox signified his willingness to do so and suggested that they pool fees and divide equally.

"No," responded Harrison, "I will take my fee and you get yours."

After the litigation was ended Harrison called again on Knox.

"Well," he said in a satisfied way, "I did pretty well in that case I received a check for $25,000."

"Is that all?" quietly asked Knox, "I received $100,000. If you had pooled as I originally suggested, General, you would have gotten $62,500."

There are never any disagreements in the Cabinet of President Roosevelt. The President himself is authority for this statement. One day there was a persistent report that differences approaching a rupture had occurred between the President and several of his Secretaries.

"That reminds me of a story of Abraham Lincoln," said the President.

"Lincoln had an important question to decide. He propounded it to his Cabinet, and forcibly expressed the opinion he had reached. What do you think of it, Mr. Secretary of State?" he inquired of Mr. Seward. The Secretary set forth views diametrically opposed to those of his chief.

The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Attorney General, Postmaster General, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Interior all agreed with Mr. Seward.

"Well," said Lincoln slowly, let's put the matter to a vote. All in favor of my views will say 'Aye.' Aye announced Mr. Lincoln gravely. No one else spoke. All opposed will say 'Nay.' The Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the rest of the Cabinet voted no. "Gentlemen there are one aye and six nays. He paused. Then, with a twinkle in his eye, "The ayes have it."

"And that, gentlemen, means there was no disagreement in Lincoln's Cabinet, and there is none in mine."

If there's anything Uncle Joe Cannon dislikes more than another, it's the verbal loquaciousness of the Washington barber.

"Shall I clip your hair a little at the ends, sir?" asked a colored tonorialist of the statesman on one occasion.

"You'll have to," granted Uncle Joe "unless you've invented some method by which you can clip it out from the middle and save the ends, which are curly. I should prefer that to all things except, of course, to your utter silence."

The Timber Supply.

Every person in the United States is using over six times as much wood as he would use if he were in Europe. The country as a whole consumes every year between three and four times more wood than all of the forests of the United States grow in the meantime. The average acre of forest plays up a store of only 10 cubic feet annually, whereas it ought to be laying up at least 30 cubic feet in order to furnish the products taken out of it. Since 1880 more than 700,000,000,000 feet of timber have been cut for lumber alone, including 80,000,000,000 feet of coniferous timber in excess of the total coniferous stumpage estimate of the Census in 1880.

These are some of the remarkable statements made in Circular 97 of the Forest Service, which deals with the timber supply of the United States and reviews the stumpage estimate made by all the important authorities. A study of the circular must lead directly to the conclusion that the rate at which forest products in the United States have been and are being consumed is far too lavish and that only one result can follow unless steps are promptly taken to prevent waste in use and to increase the growth rate of every acre of forest in the United States. This result is a timber famine. This country is today in the same position with regard to forest resources as Germany 150 years ago. During this period of 150 years such German States as Saxony and Prussia, particularly the latter, have applied a policy of government control and regulation which has immensely increased the productivity of their forests. The same policy will achieve even better results in the United States, because we have the advantage of all the lessons which Europe has learned and paid for in the course of a century of theory and practice.

Least it might be assumed that the rapid and gaining depletion of American forest resources is sufficiently accounted for by the increase of population, it is pointed out in the circular that the increase in population since 1880 is barely more than half the increase in lumber cut in the same period. Two areas supplying timber have already reached and passed their maximum production the Northeastern States in 1870 and the Lake States in 1880. Today the Southern States, which cut yellow pine amounting to one-third the total annual lumber cut of the country, are undoubtedly near their maximum. The Pacific States will soon take the ascendancy. The State of Washington within a few years has come to the front ranks first of all individual States in volume of cut.

At present but one fifth of the total area of the United States is embraced in National Forests. The remaining four fifths have already passed or are most likely to pass into private hands. The average age of the trees felled for lumber this year is not less than 150 years. In other words, if he is to secure a second crop of trees of the same size, the lumberman or private forest owner must wait, say, at least one hundred years for the second crop to grow. As a rule, such long time investments as this waiting would involve do not commend themselves to business men who are accustomed to quick returns. But the States and the Nation can look much farther ahead. The larger, then, the area of National and State control over wood lands, the greater is the likelihood that the forests of the country will be kept permanently productive.

Difficult Breathing

Short breath, fluttering, palpitation, sinking spells are symptoms of a weak heart, struggling to do its work. It must keep the blood in circulation to carry nourishment to make flesh, bone and muscle, and remove the worn-out particles. When it cannot do this, it must have help. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure gives strength to the heart nerves and muscles, and increases the heart action.

"I am glad to say that I am so much improved in health. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure cured me when several doctors failed. I think no other medicine could do for me what Heart Cure has done. My case was bad; bad as it could be at times. I had difficulty in getting my breath, my heart beat so fast at times that I thought it impossible to live without relief; the pain was very severe in my left side, and my nerves were all unstrung. I had almost given up all hope of being cured, and I am sure I would not, if I had not taken the Heart Cure. I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' remedies to all who suffer with heart disease."
